

8 on U. C. Faculty to End Long Academic Tenure

Eight University of California faculty members will retire from an active clerical academic life with the close of the Spring semester on the Berkeley campus.

In alphabetical order, they are:

Arthur G. Brodeur, professor of English and professor of Germanic Philology, a member of the faculty since 1916. Professor Brodeur was chairman of the department of Scandinavian Languages and Literature and is one of the country's leading scholars in his field.

Margaret T. Hodgen, professor of sociology and social institutions and former chairman of the department. She joined the Berkeley faculty in 1925.

AT UC SINCE 1925.

Myron E. Krueger, professor of forestry and authority on logging engineering and forestry production economics. He was a consultant to the Secretary of Agriculture in 1953, and has been at Berkeley since 1925.

Samuel C. May, professor of political science and director of the Bureau of Public Administration. He came to Berkeley in 1921 and a year later founded the bureau, the first of its kind to be established at an American university.

Woodbridge Metcalf, associate professor of forestry, joined the UC Agricultural extension in 1914. During World War II he organized farm fire fighting companies throughout California and is widely known for his work in conservation, tree planting and development of State forests for public use.

FRENCH PROFESSOR.

Arnold H. Rowbotham, professor of French and former chairman of the department. A former professor of English at Peking University, China, before his work began in Berkeley in 1923, he is an authority on the impact of Chinese culture on western literature.

Lesley B. Simpson, professor of Spanish and Portuguese, at Berkeley since 1924 and former assistant dean of the College of Letters and Science and chairman of his department. He is the author of "Many Mexicos," an award-winning work on the history and formation of modern Mexico.

Baldwin M. Woods, vice president—university extension, professor of mechanical engineering at Berkeley and professor of engineering at Los Angeles, retires after one of the longest careers in the history of the university—forty-six years.

JOINED IN 1910.

Woods joined the mathematics department in 1910, transferred to mechanical engineering in 1915.

He has been university examiner, dean of the summer session at Los Angeles, associated dean of the university and chairman of the department of mechanical engineering. He has been director of UC extension since 1942.
