

FOUND—Del Rainer, whose face on a Muni bus advertisement led her father to find her after a separation of twenty-six years. He traced her down to a Russ Building office.

Father Sees Ad in Muni Bus, Finds His Daughter

If you ride the Muni buses you've seen Del Rainer looking prettily down at you from an advertising car card.

The ad tells how you—like Del—can get and hold a fine job if only you will learn the sponsor's particular type of shorthand.

Well, William J. Rainer, a 48-year old photographic salesman, saw that picture of Del the other day, and thereby hangs a happy little story of a father and daughter reunited after twenty-six years.

Like the man says, advertising brings all things.

It started back in 1929, when Rainer separated from his wife, leaving her and 20 month old Del (she was Delores then) in San Francisco.

Mrs. Rainer was a show girl and constantly on the move, so Del was boarded out with relatives. Finally mother married again and the family settled in San Francisco, where Del grew up.

Rainer, who had become an old jobs man, mostly around Denver, received a letter from Del two years ago, the first he had heard of her in twenty-

Continued on Page 2, Col. 5)

(over)